Assistance or support used in the provision of veterinary services

Veterinary practitioners must ensure that the assistance available is appropriate for the veterinary procedures that they are undertaking.

Veterinary practitioners must ensure that all persons assisting in the provision of veterinary services to animals in their care have the skills, knowledge and available equipment to enable them to perform their duties according to current standards of the practice of veterinary science.

This guideline may not apply in situations where veterinary practitioners are providing emergency care in an adverse environment beyond the veterinary practitioners' ability to control.
